Charles County Library’s new bags of books for adoption program features 23 books that will be new additions to the system.

By SARA NEWMAN

Adoptions aren’t just for people and animals. Charles County Public Libraries hopes the community will be interested in adopting books so that a number of books popular for future themes percolated in 2017.

The Adopt-a-Book Program will provide funding to support the growth of the library’s collection and access to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community.

As the initial launch of the Adopt-a-Book Program, Charles County Public Library selected 23 books that will be new additions to the system. The books were selected for adoption for their diversity in themes, authors, and formats.

The books selected for adoption included all the first of something: “ announcing the selection. The books included in the collection were selected by staff and community members.

The books selected for adoption were all the first of something: “ announcing the selection. The books included in the collection were selected by staff and community members.

“Sneak peek” reception to reveal adoptable titles tomorrow

By SARA NEWMAN

Adoptions aren’t just for people and animals. Charles County Public Libraries hopes the community will be interested in adopting books so that a number of books popular for future themes percolated in 2017.

The Adopt-a-Book Program will provide funding to support the growth of the library’s collection and access to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community.

As the initial launch of the Adopt-a-Book Program, Charles County Public Library selected 23 books that will be new additions to the system. The books were selected for adoption for their diversity in themes, authors, and formats.

The books selected for adoption included all the first of something: “ announcing the selection. The books included in the collection were selected by staff and community members.

The books selected for adoption were all the first of something: “ announcing the selection. The books included in the collection were selected by staff and community members.

“Sneak peek” reception to reveal adoptable titles tomorrow

By SARA NEWMAN

Adoptions aren’t just for people and animals. Charles County Public Libraries hopes the community will be interested in adopting books so that a number of books popular for future themes percolated in 2017.

The Adopt-a-Book Program will provide funding to support the growth of the library’s collection and access to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community. It’s a way for people to give back to the community.

As the initial launch of the Adopt-a-Book Program, Charles County Public Library selected 23 books that will be new additions to the system. The books were selected for adoption for their diversity in themes, authors, and formats.

The books selected for adoption included all the first of something: “ announcing the selection. The books included in the collection were selected by staff and community members.

The books selected for adoption were all the first of something: “ announcing the selection. The books included in the collection were selected by staff and community members.